

Gator's Rant

"Sorry, No Can Do..."

My cousin Kirby came for a visit this month. He was on his way home after a little 18 month detour as a guest at one of our finest State facilities.

Kirby was ostensibly a Satan-Worshipper before he went to the Calabosa. Now, he's a changed man, with plans to become an internet televangelist and lead people to the Lord, collect tithes, and all that kind of stuff.

He tells everyone how glad he was that he was arrested, that it was all a part of God's grand plan. God has a special place for cousin Kirby. You see, Kirby has certain attributes that will be of some use to the church at large.

Kirby is familiar with most of the drug users, dealers, pimps, prostitutes, criminals, street gangs, homeless people, police officers, and other down-and-out people in his hometown of Klute, over near Lake Jackson in Brassiere County. He plans to minister to these folks in local dopehouses, alleyways, and in the back seats of police cars passing out gospel tracts and advising people to "get high on Jesus".

It does my hardened heart a world of good to see such a man change his life completely and take off in a new direction. Four times Kirby has been sent to jail. Each time, he came out with a gleam in his eye and a Bible in his hand (although one time it was "The Book Of Moron"). Each of the first three times, he went home to Klute, started preaching and talking about Jesus nonstop like a broken record that wouldn't quit just over and over and over till you wanted to scream an still he went on and on and never changed the subject but just stayed with it night and day like a fucking parrot only louder and he made less sense than most birds. But each time within two days he was back running with the gangs, doing drugs, and eventually back in the slammer. It's good to see that Kirby won't let past failures put a damper on his plans to bring salvation to the dope peddlers and hoochie mamas in K-Loot. I'm proud to see that he's planning to give it another whirl.

He did get irritated while he was visiting at my house, because one of my wise-ass friends asked him about how all the koala bears and kangaroos managed to swim to Australia after they survived the flood in Jonah's Ark. Instead of trying to make a sensible answer, he pulled out a knife - it was an ugly moment.

Kirby's goal is to someday have his own megachurch, which I think would be wonderful, especially in Klute. They need one of those, being one of the last small towns in the state without one.

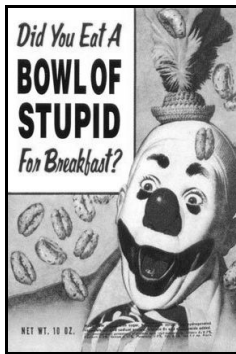

I don't generally print a lot of family business, unless it's about the Hoylands.

But Kirby is not ashamed of what he believes in, and wants the world to know he has changed.

So, since we do have several readers in Klute, this is to let you all know that Cousin Kirby is coming home again to save your souls. He has to hang out in Harris County at a halfway house on a one-way street for 30 days, then he's officially paroled, and will be there to lead you into the paths of righteousness.

Good luck with that...
